CHALLENGE

In 2013, when San Antonio's Methodist Hospital announced the largest construction project in its history, the massive $200 million project represented a huge commitment to the city and a huge investment in quality healthcare for the region. General Contractor Skanska knew they had to partner with only the best subcontractors on this high-profile project. The plan called for expanding the campus by 445,000 square feet, through the renovation and expansion of both Methodist Hospital and Methodist Children's Hospital. To complete the voice, data, video, and security network design for the project, Skanska turned to FSG San Antonio and its network technology partner, Tero Technologies.

SOLUTION

It was of primary importance to the project owner that all work would be carried out in an active hospital environment. Therefore, every task had to be scheduled and executed to avoid unnecessary interruptions to normal hospital operations. FSG and its Tero designers confirmed the plans and specifications with Skanska, then proceeded to execute the work scope reliably according to the evolving needs of this multi-year project.

RESULT

The Methodist Hospital expansion project was a smashing success for Skanska, the project owner, and most of all for area residents who now had expanded access to world-class healthcare services. Every aspect of FSG's required work scope was executed to the highest standards, and the project stands today as an example of how structured cabling and networking can elevate the final project deliverable for the owner. After the project was complete, FSG received an honor that didn't appear in the Grand Opening press releases that were showing up on local and regional media outlets. Quietly, and away from the bright lights of a ribbon-cutting ceremony, Methodist Healthcare requested that FSG and its San Antonio Tero Technology team work directly for them on future projects.
